I know, as a member of that family, it's sometimes easy to forget. As a therapist, I find it's easy to get pulled in. No doubt, in some families, one person can be a dominating presence in the family. In my family, it's the two oldest boys. One can be a tyrant of a man in one way, and in another way, completely non-controlling. The other, is a very gentle man, who can be a completely non-controlling man when he feels he's been wronged. For all families, disagreements are a part of family life. Some can be destructive. In the world of family violence, disagreements can go on for years, leaving the victim battered, bruised, bloodied, or worse. In fact, often, the abuser is the one who seems to be the reasonable one, especially to the outside observer. The first step in helping survivors of domestic violence is to recognize the abuse that they are experiencing. Recognizing something as abusive doesn't make it any less abusive. It doesn't make the abuse any less true. It is often said that the best way to get ahead in the world is to help someone else get ahead. I know this is true. When I was younger, I worked with teens, trying to help them stay out of trouble. I often found myself acting as a mentor to them. But, how do you keep them from being in trouble with the law, or from using drugs, or from losing jobs? I tried helping, but I soon found myself in trouble with the law myself. I needed help. 82157476af
